Задание 1.

Read the text and answer the following questions.

THE ROCKS OF METEORA

On the plain of Thessaly, in the heart of northern Greece, 24 gigantic rocks of Meteora rise perpendicularly from the ground. Greek historian Herodotus, living in the 5th century BC, writes that the local inhabitants believed the plain of Thessaly had once been covered by the sea. If this were true, it probably referred to the end of the ice age, around 8000 BC. Indeed, scientists believe that Meteora's rocks were created by the waters of a sea. Curiously, neither Herodotus nor any writer of ancient Greece mentions the rocks of Meteora. This has led to the theory that they did not exist 2000 years ago, a theory scientists do not take seriously.

Monks were the first to inhabit Meteora during the 9th century – the rocks offered shelter from the elements and prevented visitors from interrupting their isolation. By the end of the 12th century, the monks had organized themselves into a community.

By the 14th century, the Byzantine Empire which had ruled the region for more than eight centuries was beginning to lose its power. The rich and fertile plain of Thessaly became a battleground as Serbian kings and Turkish raiders fought with each other, and the Byzantine Empire, for influence over northern Greece. Peaceful monasteries seemed particularly vulnerable to the conflicts. In 1334, monks left the monastery of Mount Athos. Ten years later, the monk Athanasios led a group of them to Meteora. Between 1356 and 1372, Athanasios founded the Great Meteoron monastery on Broad Rock.

Broad Rock was ideally suited to the needs of Athanasios and his followers. Once established on the high rock they had complete control of the place. A long ladder provided the only route to the top and this could be drawn up by the monks in case of danger. A few decades later the ladder was replaced by a net and rope device.

Visitors to the Great Meteoron, named from the Greek word meaning "high in the air", were advised to pray as they made the risky way up. In 1896, a Russian churchman described his trip in the net as "an agonizing lift, the rope was going here and there all the time dragging me along until at last it reached the top. But as they pulled towards the wooden platform, they overturned the net. Horrified, I closed my eyes and nearly lost consciousness." This dangerous method has been replaced by a flight of 115 steps cut out in the rock.

Of the 24 monasteries that grew up between the 13th and 16th centuries, only five still inhabited: the lack of isolation has made the monks leave the place. The arrival of a great number of tourists in the second half of the 20th century has effectively turned Meteora into a museum piece.
